

The Modern Prophet and the Original Hippie

By Caitlin Shayda Jones

Published: July 23, 2012

Permalink: <http://239days.com/2012/07/23/elbert-hubbard-modern-prophet-original-hippie/>

“THERE IS NO DOUBT, among thinking people, that this man represents, in great degree, the growing and evolving spirit of our times.” That was Elbert Hubbard in “A Modern Prophet,” an article he wrote about ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in the July 22, 1912, issue of Hearst’s Magazine.

Elbert Hubbard was a businessman turned marketing guru who, after climbing to the highest ranks of the Larkin Soap Company before the age of thirty, decided he was spiritually empty. He moved to East Aurora, a country town south of Buffalo, and established an Arts and Crafts community called Roycroft. The movement was in protest to the industrial revolution, he said, which was rendering handcrafted goods obsolete. Roycroft soon became a site for the meetings of socialists, freethinkers, and suffragists.

Hubbard also developed a second career as a populist writer, using his skills as an ad man to repackage ideas from philosophers and poets into mass market slogans. “Conformists die, heretics live forever,” was one such slogan. He also wrote popular essays with titles like “Jesus Was An Anarchist.” Ironically, the man who would one day be called America’s “original hippie” became famous for an 1899 short story on worker obedience. It catapulted him into the realm of celebrity.

“According to Abdul Baha,” Hubbard wrote in Hearst’s Magazine, “we are now living in a period of time that marks the beginning of the millennium – a thousand years of peace, happiness and prosperity.” He told his readers that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá had come to the West with a mission, and that no one should doubt his sincerity. “He is no mere eccentric,” Hubbard added.

Elbert Hubbard likely never met ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Whatever means he used to research his article, he managed to simultaneously capture the spirit of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s message while getting most of his facts wrong. “He speaks many languages and certainly speaks English better than most Americans do,” Hubbard wrote. Of course, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá barely spoke a word of English. Hubbard also claimed that one-third of all Persians had joined the Bahá’í religion.

Hubbard's article was designed to cater to a country disillusioned with the status quo. 'Abdu'l-Bahá's message, he stated, "presages a world-wide upspringing of vital religion." "In the world of economics, we in America are infinitely beyond anything that can come to us from the Orient," Hubbard wrote. "But the divine fire of this man's spirituality is bound to illuminate the dark corners of our imaginations and open up to us a spiritual realm which we would do well to go in and possess."

By 1912 handcrafted goods and the bungalows that housed them were going out of style. Hubbard's marriage ended in divorce when a longtime affair with Alice Moore was exposed. Then the war broke out. "Who lifted the lid off of hell?" Hubbard said. He blamed it all on big business.

On May 1, 1915, Elbert Hubbard and wife Alice boarded the Lusitania bound for Europe. He hoped to interview Kaiser Wilhelm. Hubbard had once written a moving tribute about the Titanic, and the death of a couple who had refused the lifeboats in order to die together. At ten minutes past two in the afternoon on May 7, a torpedo from a German U-Boat glided across the water toward the Lusitania. Hubbard and Alice linked arms, entered a room on the top deck, and closed the door.

How to Cite this Article

The formatting below is from the Chicago Manual of Style, 17th Edition. For other academic citation styles, please adapt accordingly. Since the 239 Days site and its contents may be updated from time to time, we recommend you include a “last modified” date, which is provided at the top of both the web and PDF versions of this article.

FOOTNOTE / ENDNOTE:

Caitlin Shayda Jones, “The Modern Prophet and the Original Hippie,” 239 Days in America, ed. Jonathan Menon and Robert Sockett, July 23, 2012, <http://239days.com/2012/07/23/elbert-hubbard-modern-prophet-original-hippie/>.

BIBLIOGRAPHY:

Jones, Caitlin Shayda. “The Modern Prophet and the Original Hippie.” 239 Days in America. Edited by Jonathan Menon and Robert Sockett. July 23, 2012. <http://239days.com/2012/07/23/elbert-hubbard-modern-prophet-original-hippie/>.

HOW TO CITE THE 239 Days in America WEBSITE IN A BIBLIOGRAPHY:

Menon, Jonathan, and Robert Sockett, eds. 239 Days in America. <http://239days.com/>.

Terms of Use

239 Days in America™ and the 239Days.com website is licensed under a Creative Commons 3.0 License as specified at this link: <http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/3.0/>. This PDF file is shared with you with the following additional terms:

YOU MAY quote from this PDF file with proper attribution. Your citation must include the author's name and the 239 Days in America project's name. You may download and print this PDF file, and you may share individual PDF files in print or electronic form.

Although we want to make our work easy to share, we also wish to maintain the unity and integrity of 239 Days in America as a whole. Therefore,

YOU MAY NOT republish or rebroadcast our PDF files in a public forum—such as by uploading them to a blog, app, or other web property, publishing them in print form, or distributing them widely using electronic means—without our prior written consent. We invite you to discuss such opportunities with us by contacting the Editor-In-Chief at editor@239Days.com. Otherwise, please share the permalinks displayed at the top of each file.

YOU MAY NOT extract pages from this file, recombine this PDF file with other documents, assemble its contents into any free or paid product, app, ebook, collection, compilation, or archive, nor remove this page of Terms. The Adobe PDF™ security features employed in this document have been selected to prevent such use. You may not circumvent these security features in any way.