

‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Program for a Durable Peace: 1919

By Jonathan Menon

Published: November 27, 2012 | Last modified: January 30, 2015

Permalink: <http://239days.com/2012/11/27/abdu-bahas-program-for-a-durable-peace-1919/>

“PEACE, PEACE, the lips of potentates and peoples unceasingly proclaim,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was heard to say in the months following the First World War, “whereas the fire of unquenched hatreds still smolders in their hearts.”¹

‘Abdu’l-Bahá began to advise Americans against putting too much faith in the outcome of the Paris Peace Conference before it had even begun. “Although the representatives of various governments are assembled in Paris in order to lay the foundations of Universal Peace,” he wrote to a friend in Portland, Oregon, on January 10, 1919, two days before the conference convened, “yet misunderstanding . . . is still predominant and self-interest still prevails. In such an atmosphere, Universal Peace will not be practicable, nay rather, fresh difficulties will arise.”²

He argued the same point in a long letter to the Central Organization for a Durable Peace, a commission set up in 1915 at The Hague to plan for an eventual postwar reconciliation.³ Fannie Fern Andrews, one of the American members of the commission, explained its purpose in front of the American Academy of Political and Social Science in 1916. “When the representatives of the states come together in the midst of the wreck and desolation left by the war, their task will be almost overwhelming,” she said. “The fundamental basis of the new world order which must come after the present war must be laid today.”⁴ The Organization asked ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to present his proposals for global peace in February, 1916, but he was cut off behind enemy lines and didn’t receive the letter until after the war ended.

The central message of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s letter, which he sent to The Hague from Haifa on December 17, 1919, was that achieving universal peace would be impossible unless ¹ ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, quoted in Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahá’u’lláh, rev. ed. (Wilmette, IL: Bahá’í Publishing Trust, 1974), 29–30.

² ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to David Buchanan, 10 January 1919, in Star of the West 10, no. 3 (April 28, 1919): 42.

³ ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to Central Organization for a Durable Peace, 17 December 1919, quoted in Bahá’í World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá (Wilmette, IL: Bahá’í Publishing Trust, 1976), 284–296.

⁴ Fannie Fern Andrews, “The Central Organization for a Durable Peace,” Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science 66 (July 1916): 16.

its definition were radically expanded. “The scope of Universal Peace must be such that all the communities and religions may find their highest wish realized in it.”⁵

Peace, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá argued, required a social transformation of enormous depth and scope: worldwide consciousness of the whole human race being a single people; individuals being willing to seek out truth independently, unencumbered by tradition or authority; recognition of the central motivating role of non-dogmatic, reasonable religious belief interacting with science; deliberately weeding out religious, racial, class, partisan, and nationalistic prejudices; complete equality between the sexes; universal education for children; adoption of an international language to facilitate cross-cultural communication; a universal conviction that the whole surface of the earth is one native land.⁶ National boundaries, he argued, are imaginary lines that emerged during the early history of civilization to serve the selfish interests of a few individuals, and these led in turn to “intense enmity, bloodshed and rapacity in subsequent centuries.” “In the same way,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá emphasized, “this will continue indefinitely, and if this conception of patriotism remains limited within a certain circle, it will be the primary cause of the world’s destruction.”⁷

He then addressed the collective security arrangements, or the lack of them, that had emerged out of Paris. “Although the League of Nations has been brought into existence, yet it is incapable of establishing Universal Peace.”⁸ In its place, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá proposed an institution far more powerful than either the League or the United Nations that succeeded it. The key features that distinguished this “Supreme Tribunal” from the League of Nations, he argued, would be the institution’s legitimacy and its jurisdiction.

First, the members of this supreme global body would have to be elected by each country’s parliament from a pool of candidates from their country. These members, their numbers determined in proportion to population, would have to be confirmed by the other national organs of government in their states—the upper house, the congress, the cabinet, the president, and the monarch—so their legitimacy would be indisputable: “all mankind will thus have a share therein, for every one of these delegates is fully representative of his nation.” This strong legitimacy would translate into effective action, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá argued, because “When the Supreme Tribunal gives a ruling on any international question, either unanimously or by majority-rule, there will no longer be any pretext for the plaintiff or ground of objection for the defendant.” Should any country ignore the Tribunal’s ruling “the rest of the nations will rise up against it,” he wrote, providing the power of enforcement.⁹

“Consider what a firm foundation this is!” he said. “But by a limited and restricted League the purpose will not be realized as it ought and should. This is the truth about

⁵ ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to Central Organization, in Bahá’i World Faith, 290.

⁶ Ibid., 285–290.

⁷ Ibid., 287.

⁸ Ibid., 292.

⁹ Ibid., 291–292.

the situation. . . .”¹⁰

The new world order that emerged in Paris, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá believed, was inadequate to meet even the immediate challenges presented by emerging ideologies of power that were still an afterthought in 1919. “Movements, newly-born and world-wide in their range, will exert their utmost effort for the advancement of their designs,” he insisted in January, 1920. “The Movement of the Left will acquire great importance. Its influence will spread.”¹¹

“The ills from which the world now suffers,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá wrote, “will multiply; the gloom which envelops it will deepen. The Balkans will remain discontented. Its restlessness will increase. The vanquished Powers will continue to agitate. They will resort to every measure that may rekindle the flame of war.”¹²

¹⁰ Ibid., 292.

¹¹ ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, quoted in Shoghi Effendi, World Order, 30.

¹² Ibid.

How to Cite this Article

The formatting below is from the Chicago Manual of Style, 17th Edition. For other academic citation styles, please adapt accordingly. Since the 239 Days site and its contents may be updated from time to time, we recommend you include a “Last modified” date, which is provided at the top of both the web and PDF versions of this article.

FOOTNOTE/ENDNOTE:

Jonathan Menon, “Abdu’l-Bahá’s Program for a Durable Peace,” 239 Days in America, ed. Jonathan Menon and Robert Sockett, November 27, 2012, <http://239days.com/2012/11/27/abdul-bahas-program-for-a-durable-peace-1919/>.

BIBLIOGRAPHY:

Menon, Jonathan. “Abdu’l-Bahá’s Program for a Durable Peace.” 239 Days in America. Edited by Jonathan Menon and Robert Sockett. November 27, 2012, <http://239days.com/2012/11/27/abdul-bahas-program-for-a-durable-peace-1919/>.

HOW TO CITE THE 239 Days in America WEBSITE IN A BIBLIOGRAPHY:

Menon, Jonathan, and Robert Sockett, eds. 239 Days in America. <http://239days.com/>.

Terms of Use

239 Days in America™ and the 239Days.com website is licensed under a Creative Commons 3.0 License as specified at this link: <http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/3.0/>. This PDF file is shared with you with the following additional terms:

YOU MAY quote from this PDF file with proper attribution. Your citation must include the author's name and the 239 Days in America project's name. You may download and print this PDF file, and you may share individual PDF files in print or electronic form.

Although we want to make our work easy to share, we also wish to maintain the unity and integrity of 239 Days in America as a whole. Therefore,

YOU MAY NOT republish or rebroadcast our PDF files in a public forum—such as by uploading them to a blog, app, or other web property, publishing them in print form, or distributing them widely using electronic means—without our prior written consent. We invite you to discuss such opportunities with us by contacting the Editor-In-Chief at editor@239Days.com. Otherwise, please share the permalinks displayed at the top of each file.

YOU MAY NOT extract pages from this file, recombine this PDF file with other documents, assemble its contents into any free or paid product, app, ebook, collection, compilation, or archive, nor remove this page of Terms. The Adobe PDF™ security features employed in this document have been selected to prevent such use. You may not circumvent these security features in any way.